NorthWestern underestimates tax hike after $900M dam buy

BY MATT VOLZ
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HELENA (AP) - NorthWestern Energy officials say they won’t appeal a big increase in the company’s Montana property taxes after last year’s $900 million purchase of 11 hydroelectric dams.

Instead, the company’s customers will pay for most of the nearly $23 million tax hike.

Public Service Commission members questioned NorthWestern and Department of Revenue officials about the taxes on Dec. 7. They expressed frustration about the amount and the utility’s ability to simply pass most of it on to its customers.

The increase is primarily a result of NorthWestern’s $900 million purchase of 11 hydroelectric dams last year from PPL Montana. The dams boosted NorthWestern’s assets and drove up its stock price, which factor into how the utility’s taxes are calculated, Revenue Director Mike Kadas said.

“NorthWestern paid considerably more than what we had valued that property at under PPL ownership,” Kadas said.

NorthWestern underestimated the final tax increase by about $5 million. Attorney John Alke says the utility decided against an appeal because the Montana Tax Appeal Board does not favor corporate taxpayers.

Alke says the hikes will amount to about a 4.5 percent increase in the typical electricity customer’s bill and a 4.9 percent average increase for natural gas customers.

Vehicle wrecks into grocery store near Big Sky Resort

BIG SKY – Just after 2 p.m. on Dec. 4 a man who allegedly suffered a seizure lost control of the Hyundai Sonata he was driving and crashed into the C&P Grocery store next door to the Black Bear Bar & Grill.

Two C&P employees were in the grocery store at the time of the accident. One sought medical attention for back injuries and the other said she was shaken up by the ordeal but otherwise uninjured.

Two onlookers pulled the driver from the vehicle according to a witness.

“I don’t think the car made contact with anybody [in the building],” said Montana State Highway Patrol Trooper Zachary Gold who investigated the accident. “Everybody was up and walking around. Obviously, it did a lot of damage to the building.”

The car was near the intersection of Sitting Bull and Moose Ridge roads when it veered off the road and into the grocery store.

The owner of the vehicle, said it appeared the driver had suffered a seizure. She said he lost consciousness before the accident and didn’t come to until he was in the back of an ambulance bound for Bozeman Health Deaconess Hospital.

The vehicle was removed from the building by a tow truck later that afternoon.
Reflect on kindness this holiday

BY ERIC LADDO
EBS PUBLISHER

On behalf of the Explore Big Sky and Outlaw Partners staff, I would like to wish you all a happy holiday. For those visiting southwest Montana, welcome and enjoy, I hope you have a memorable vacation with incredible hospitality.

For local readers, thank you for your continued support in helping grow this publication into one of the state’s largest newspapers, and the only one in the Big Sky community. We are honored to be the voice for this region.

Our world is facing challenging times, including destruction of the global landscape, terrorism and homegrown violence dominating the headlines. As we wade through these troubling waters let’s remember we can all affect change by leading with our actions.

Imagine a planet where we treat each other with kindness, and respect Mother Nature as if our lives depended on it – in fact, they do. Small actions can breed big results.

This year was a turning point for our region as we witnessed record-setting growth and development. Farm fields and mountain valleys are quickly turning into subdivisions.

Big Sky is slated for billions of dollars in new development with the building of hundreds of new residences, as well as hundreds of thousands of square feet of new hotels and commercial centers. And Bozeman is now one of the fastest growing communities in the country.

With this development will come new jobs, and many will prosper from the accelerated growth. But with growth comes a responsibility to protect the very resources that drew us all to this region, which I firmly believe will be one of the most significant stories in the next year.

2016 will be a year when voices for conservation, responsible and sustainable growth, and protection of resources like clean air and water must be heard. Big Sky is an unincorporated town, and without dedicated governance, development occurs faster and with less regulation – this poses both an opportunity and a challenge.

Issues such as affordable housing, traffic, road safety, schools, infrastructure development, land conservation and preservation of animal habitat are becoming powerful conversation pieces for 2016. At EBS we are committed to thoughtful and responsible reporting while giving a voice to not only the people who live here but also the natural world we share this area with.

EBS is a newspaper that prints thoughtful stories every 14 days, is distributed throughout southwest Montana, and is mailed to dedicated readers around the country. Explorebigsky.com is the online platform for our media portfolio, providing news, events and stories posted daily.

Nearly 1 million people will read EBS and explorebigsky.com in 2016, and we take the responsibility of reporting seriously. To our advertisers, thank you for your support. We remain committed to growing this publication next year, making your advertising dollars as effective as possible.

Enjoy the holiday season and remember kindness is contagious – let’s spread it wide.

The Dec. 9 opening of Big Sky Medical Center has broadly expanded healthcare offerings in Big Sky with its four-bed inpatient unit, six-room emergency department, lab services and MRI. How will its opening impact you and this community?

Lianne Kershaw, Big Sky, Mont.
Owner, Sanook Skin Care and Massage Therapy

“This is a historical day, not just for the state, but for the community. To be able to access services that we normally have to go to Bozeman for - that’s a blessing. ... We’re so lucky that we have a certain affluence in the community. I know that there were big donations from the Yellowstone Club and a few members that donated a half of a million dollars each.”

Ross Downer, Big Sky, Mont.
Rental Technician, Grizzly Outfitters Ski & Backcountry Sports

“I definitely think it’s important to the community because we have a small population, but a lot of medical [incidents]. ... There’s definitely demand for urgent medical care. [On Dec. 8] there were two different folks who got ambulanced [off Big Sky Resort], pretty much simultaneously.”

Jenny Hake, Big Sky, Mont.
Emergency Room Registered Nurse, Big Sky Medical Center

“We get to take care of our community members when they’re in need instead of sending them somewhere else ... We’ll get to know names and faces and they’ll get to know us as a staff, instead of going to a big, crazy E.R.”
Big Sky Medical Center opens
Culmination of 15 planning years ‘historic’

BY JOSEPH T. O’CONNOR
EBS MANAGING EDITOR

BIG SKY – More than 200 Big Sky residents and visitors crowded the atrium in the Bozeman Health Big Sky Medical Center on Dec. 9, for what Bozeman Health interim dyad CEO and President as well as its CFO Gordon Davidson called a “historic event.”

Visitors took guided tours through the 51,625-square-foot facility that includes a six-room emergency department; four-bed inpatient unit; primary care clinic; pharmacy; laboratory services; medevac landing pad; and imaging center with a new cutting-edge MRI scanner.

BSMC will be fully operational and accepting patients on Dec. 12.

The welcoming and ribbon-cutting ceremonies culminated a dream that took root during the center’s groundbreaking in May 2014, but one that was planted much earlier, according to Big Sky Resort President and General Manager Taylor Middleton, also the chair of BSMC’s board of managers.

“Sure, two years from moving dirt until this building opened is [a] spectacular timeframe,” Middleton told the crowd in the atrium, “but the board of directors for Bozeman Health has been working on this project for over 15 years.”

After years of planning, Bozeman Health – called Bozeman Deaconess at the time – opened a pharmacy in 2004 in Big Sky Meadow Village then in 2005 bought the land along Lone Mountain Trail where the medical center exists now.

Beginning in 2013, Big Sky community leaders held open forums to discuss options for a hospital in the area, inviting Bozeman Deaconess representatives as well as those from Billings Clinic to participate.

“This is a big deal,” Middleton said. “Within two years we were building a hospital right here in this place where cows, and for that matter, buffalo used to roam.”

Dr. David Chen, BSMC’s chief medical officer, hired five physicians to work out of Big Sky’s facility, including Maren Dunn, D.O.; Mark Siemer, D.O.; Jeremy Mitchell, D.O.; Kirk Weber, M.D., FACEP; and Philip A. Hess, M.D., who will serve as the center’s medical director.

A major benefit to having a medical facility in Big Sky, Hess said, will be speedier medical attention for many ailments. Until now, patients had to travel or be transported to Bozeman for definitive care.

“We’re going to be able to provide care for a lot of people and reduce their travel time,” said Hess, who moved to Big Sky last July and began work at BSMC in August. “The ambulance won’t have to leave Big Sky to take people to Bozeman nearly so often.”

Longtime locals Les Loble and Bob Thompson chatted in front of the facility’s large front windows, ruminating on the additional benefits to having BSMC in such close proximity to Big Sky’s resort and its neighborhoods. Both retired in Big Sky, they discussed the advantages those of retirement age will see.

“When I was in the fire department we could not administer clot-busting drugs because we didn’t know what [the patient’s] condition was,” said Loble, referring to medication administered to stroke patients. “Here, [doctors] will know, so you save a really important hour … in the treatment of the patient. It will reduce the drag on the fire department’s resources.”

BSMC will employ 35-40 individuals to start, Davidson said during his portion of the address, and will operate as a not-for-profit organization to generate funding that it plans to reinvest into the community. In 2015 alone, donors funded the BSMC Phase 1 effort with nearly $3 million through the nonprofit Bozeman Health Foundation.

“Healthcare is not new to us as an organization, but this is a new opportunity to us,” Davidson said. “How we will improve is with feedback, [and] we welcome feedback. Today is about execution. And the execution doesn’t stop today; today is just the start.”

BY DUSTIN SHIPMAN
BSSD SUPERINTENDENT

“The Ram’s Horn” is a regular column by Big Sky School District Superintendent Dustin Shipman, offering news and insight from the district.

As we approach the middle of the second quarter in the school district, we are busy with holiday performance rehearsals, working through curriculum and preparing for the future. As you all know, the school board and community are now in the implementation stages of our strategic planning process and one of the major areas of the initiative is faculty excellence.

Each day around the world, parents entrust schools to care for their children, with the expectation that the students’ lives will be enhanced in a learning environment. In order for these expectations to be met, schools must have a number of things in place: strong curriculum, safe facilities, a welcoming environment and capable teachers. Research indicates that the single most influential factor to increased student achievement is an effective teacher.

We are currently in the process of articulating expectations in order to have excellent faculty members in BSSD. We are fortunate to have leadership that has worked in a variety of educational settings and are highly developed in identifying and supporting excellence in the classroom. One of our biggest goals as administrators so far has been to gather school-wide data for both teaching strategies and behaviors in the district.

We have been able to establish baseline criteria for articulating high expectations, how those expectations will be demonstrated, and what additional supports are needed to ensure that Big Sky teachers are among the best in Montana and the Northwest. In order to be the best school, we need to employ, retain, support and celebrate teachers who make serious impacts with students on a daily basis.

To execute the ambitious plan the board has adopted, the faculty will be very involved and will have to manage much of the heavy lifting. We will support extensive professional development for faculty, encourage reflective teaching, and continue to assess and coach thoughtful planning of lessons.

Ultimately, our jobs as school administrators are to ensure the faculty has the tools, support and training required to be excellent – because excellent teachers equal excellent schools.

BSSD Students of the Month: November

As part of its Student of the Month program, the Big Sky School District honored four students in November for exemplifying caring.

Teachers choose two “students of the month” from kindergarten through fourth grades and two in middle and high school, recognizing them based on a different theme every month.

K-2 Student of the Month - Marley Chapin, kindergarten

Marley’s teachers and classmates appreciate her empathetic nature and the way she checks in to make sure everyone is doing well. Marley is willing to help a friend who needs a little pick-me-up, and you can often find her in school with a smile on her face and a little pep in her step. Way to go Marley!

3-4 Student of the Month – Madeline Mars, third grade

Maddie exemplifies the trait of caring throughout the school day. Not only does she care for her peers, but she also cares greatly about her schoolwork and accomplishing tasks that are bestowed upon her. Maddie demonstrates caring for peers by checking in with students that might be down or in need of help. Pride in her work is another example of how Maddie shows that she cares about the effort she puts in. Thank you Maddie for being a role model for us all, and showing us how to be caring individuals!

Lone Peak High School Student of the Month – Rhett Leuzinger, 10th grade

What does it mean to be caring? You have concern for the well-being of others; give of yourself without expecting anything in return; show respect to people around you; are kind to everyone and don’t exclude others from opportunities; and you listen to what others have to say. Rhett demonstrates all of these behaviors.

In school, Rhett shows concern for others by helping them better understand concepts in class, and is one of the most respectful young men we know. Often times it’s easier to sit back and do your own thing, rather than worry about what is going on around you – we are happy that we don’t see that behavior in Rhett. Rhett is simply a kind person.

Obituary: Lynne C. Malpeli

Lynne is survived by her five children: John C. Malpeli III of Lake Wylie, S.C.; Faith Malpeli of Big Sky, Mont.; Marc (Kay) Malpeli of Winterhaven, Fl.; Camille Malpeli of Brighton, Mi., and Hope Walker of York, S.C. SHERIDAN/ROBERTS, Mont. – Junior guard Eddie Starz scored 34 points on Dec. 4 in the Big Horns’ first basketball game of the season, breaking his own 28-point school record during a 66-28 road win over the Sheridan Panthers.

Two LPHS players added double-doubles in the Big Horns’ decisive win. Senior Chris Tompkins, new to the regular starting lineup, logged 15 points and 11 rebounds. Sophomore Jackson Wade netted 10 points and snagged 12 rebounds in his first high school basketball game.

Big Horns Head Coach Al Malinowski said the team’s dynamics are still falling into place – especially with only three returning players – but he’s pleased with what he’s seen so far.

“We don’t have a lot of game experience, but we have a lot of athleticism, a decent amount of skill, and a lot of work ethic,” Malinowski said.

On Dec. 5, the Big Horns launched a strong fourth quarter comeback but ultimately couldn’t close the gap to catch the Roberts Rockets, a bigger team with a deeper bench.

After scoring six points or fewer in each of the three preceding quarters, the Big Horns found the mark with their shots, scoring 24 points in the fourth quarter. LPHS closed the deficit to five points but ultimately lost to the Rockets 49-40.

“[Roberts] clearly had more game experience … I think experience was the difference in that game, especially early on,” Malinowski said. “We made a pretty nice comeback, but we had dug a pretty big hole to come back out of.”

Malinowski is hoping to add two players to his lineup in coming weeks, bringing the roster to a total of nine.

Once he’s participated in enough practices, eighth-grader Frankie Starz will don a Big Horns jersey to play with the high school team.

Senior Hugo Boman is still dealing with a wrist injury he suffered during football season, but will be back on the practice court over the holiday break, pending a successful recovery.

LPHS boys handle Sheridan in season opener, lose to Roberts

SHERIDAN/ROBERTS, Mont. – Two wins under their belt and seven returners on their 15-player hoops team, the Lady Big Horns are shaping up to be serious contenders this season.

LPHS established a sizable lead early on in their Dec. 4 victory at Sheridan, leading 26-9 at the half. “We were able to score a lot of points right from the get-go and get some experience for the new girls,” said Head Coach Nubia Allen.

With just five girls on their team, Sheridan got into foul trouble in the third quarter when one Panther fouled out, followed by another in the fourth.

“We've got a real young freshman point guard that does a real good job of handling and distributing the ball,” said Big Horns head coach Al Malinowski.

Juniors Dasha Bough and Luisa Locker led the team with 10 points each in the Big Horns’ 47-23 victory over the Panthers.

On Dec. 5, the Lady Big Horns managed a 46-39 win in Roberts, relying on strong defense to shore up some offensive weaknesses. “We were a little bit sloppy [on offense], but we were able to come out with a win,” Allen said.

Locker and junior Bianca Godoy had particularly strong showings.

“[Locker] was able to create a lot for us, get teammates open, and she’s also a very good defender,” Allen said of her point guard.

Godoy contributed seven points and aggressively defended the strongest player on the opposing team, a 5-foot-11-inch post player who netted more than half of the Rockets’ points.

Godoy is the Lady Big Horns’ smallest post player but the team’s best defender, Allen said. “She’s 5-foot-5 but she plays like she’s 6 feet tall.”

The seven returning girls played together in four tournaments this summer and there are no seniors on the LPHS squad this year. “We have a situation where our juniors have to be seniors and our sophomores have to be juniors,” Allen said.

The Lady Big Horns are still dialing in their team chemistry and learning one another’s strengths and weaknesses, according to Allen, but she has high expectations for the team and its potential for tournament success.

“If they keep improving the way they have so far, we’ll be in the top four in the district and make it to divisionals and then state,” Allen said.

Three LPHS volleyball players earn All-Conference honors

BY AMANDA EGGERT
EBS STAFF WRITER

BIG SKY - Two Lone Peak High School juniors and one freshman received All-Conference honors for their performance in the 2015 volleyball season.

This was the second consecutive year junior and team captain Luisa Locker was named First Team All-Conference after leading the league in digs – the defensive specialist had 289 digs in 2015.

“She is incredibly athletic and she has a great court sense,” said Lady Big Horns Head Coach Sarah Griffiths of Locker’s play. “This year she was elected captain and that’s really where I started to see her shine ... She really put the team in a position to win.”

Junior Bianca Godoy, also a team captain, was fifth in the league with 148 digs and 18th overall in kills. She was named Second Team All-Conference.

“[Godoy] is an incredible all-around player. She is solid on the front row and she is solid on the back row,” Griffiths said, adding that she’s impressed by the outside hitter’s consistency. “I don’t think she ever has a bad day.”

Freshman Solae Swanson was named First Team All-Conference, racking up enough kills to be ranked third overall in the district.

“She was such a breakout player for us,” Griffiths said of Swanson. “She started the season as what we call a swing player, so she was playing both [junior varsity] and varsity, and after one game she earned a starting varsity position.

“She is a playmaker and a firecracker,” Griffiths said, adding that she holds the LPHS record for kills in a game (13). Just one other freshman in the district was named First Team All-Conference.

The Lady Big Horns made remarkable improvements in the 2015 season, as demonstrated by their regular season record of 12-4, the fifth-year program’s best to date.

“It’s validating for me as a coach to see our program grow and to see that program then be recognized and rewarded by the other coaches who see us as a force to be reckoned with in the district,” Griffiths said.

At the District 8C Tournament in late October, LPHS lost to the Gardiner Bruins, the three-time defending state champions and a team they beat in regular season play earlier in the year. The Lady Big Horns bounced back with a win against Shields Valley before losing their next match to White Sulphur Springs, ending the season at 13-6.

There were no seniors on the roster this year, which could hint at a solid showing for the Lady Big Horns in 2016.

You could feel the desperation emanating from an entire city and fan base on Nov. 30 in Cleveland, as the Baltimore Ravens defeated the Browns in the closing seconds of their Week 12 matchup.

As Cleveland placekicker Travis Coons lined up for a game-winning field goal, it seemed the Browns were about to win a tight contest. But instead of the ball sailing through the uprights for a Browns victory, the kick was blocked by the Ravens and returned by Will Hill for the game-winning touchdown.

This is the life of a Browns fan, and it’s been a very long time since the team had anything to be excited about. They are currently in their longest playoff drought in team history – their last appearance was in 2002 – and they haven’t won a playoff game since 1994.

The components of a successful NFL franchise are pretty clear: consistent coaching, quality quarterback play, and personnel decisions revolving around drafting well, and not overpaying free agents. These are consistent traits of the most accomplished NFL teams, and when you look at how the Browns have fared in these three key categories, it’s clear why they’ve been so dismal.

While the rest of the AFC North division teams – the Ravens, Pittsburgh Steelers, and Cincinnati Bengals – have combined to employ only five head coaches since 2003, the Browns have had seven different head coaches in that same span.

Since the Browns last made the playoffs, they’ve had 21 different starting quarterbacks, including most recently Austin Davis, who got his first start in Week 13.

Additionally, only six of the 15 players the Browns have drafted in the first round since 2002 are still on the roster, and center Alex Mack and cornerback Joe Haden are expected to move after this season.

The quarterback situation seems to be at its worst this year, as the Browns have started three players at the position and none has been productive. The best of the three, 36-year-old Josh McCown, is on his seventh team of his career, and led the Browns to a 1-7 record as a starter this season before breaking his collarbone.

The team’s 2014 first-round pick Johnny Manziel was supposed to provide hope at the position, but he’s been in the news more often for his off-field antics than for his on-field performance. The Associated Press recently reported that Manziel had “patted his way out of the lineup” following his Nov. 25 benching.

The Browns need to find an answer. Head Coach Mike Pettine seems like a good long-term solution for the team, but if they continue to draft poorly and struggle at the quarterback position, they have little hope of ever making the postseason.

Acquiring a quarterback is easier said than done, but the Browns also need to draft better and not overpay free agents. Three of their 10 highest paid players this season are underperforming free-agent acquisitions, including receiver Dwayne Bowe, who counts for $4.5 million against the salary cap this year despite only catching three passes through the first 12 games.

If the Browns take a different approach than the past 13 years, there’s no reason why they can’t head in the right direction. For now though, the team needs to erase the bad aspects and move forward making sound, long-term decisions – including ridding themselves of problems like Manziel.

Embracing the ‘Internet of Things’

BY JOHANNE BOUCHARD
EBS BUSINESS COLUMNIST

In an early November column, I wrote about cloud computing, including Software as a Service and Platform as a Service. Now, as we approach 2016, it’s important to prioritize the “Internet of Things” given the fast progression of technology, and our dependency on data and devices.

IoT is basically a network of physical objects, or “things,” embedded with electronics, software, sensors and network connectivity, which enable these objects to collect and exchange data. In essence, IoT turns a product that lacked any real intelligence into a “smart” product able to identify user behavior.

This is creating opportunities for enhanced integration between the physical world and computer-based systems, and resulting in the potential for improved efficiency, accuracy and economic benefit. Don’t underestimate this—it’s predicted that IoT will consist of approximately 50 billion objects by 2020. We’re about to feel this powerful technology wave in the very near future.

Examples of IoT include smart light bulbs from Philips, Logitech’s smart remotes, wearable devices including the new Apple watch, and a smart thermostat by Google, among others.

I recently met a woman who started an IoT company, and one of my friends is now a CEO of an IoT business. It is the next big thing in technology that we all must understand, as it will impact us as individuals, consumers and how we lead and grow our businesses.

As a business owner you should embrace change and understand that things will be done very differently in 12-18 months from now. Do you remember how we used to rely on fax machines to conduct business, and cameras for taking photographs? Now, your customers take a photo and the network, cloud or device records where it was taken. Built-in artificial intelligence, predictive modeling and connectivity of all things are happening.

I mentioned in previous columns that my career began in data. Today, data is going to make our businesses smarter than ever and we’re going to leverage the value of data like never before. IoT will function with cloud-based computing for us to know everything about what we come in contact with.

IoT will be revolutionary for smart homes, clothes, transportation, energy usage, smart retail and healthcare. Imagine the benefits of a smart infant monitor providing parents with real-time information about their baby’s breathing, skin temperature and body position. Or the immeasurable value of prescription bottles with a wireless chip to help people be disciplined with their prescription regimen.

Envision more intelligent fitness devices at your fingertips that automatically monitor your movements, location and workouts. And there are a number of applications that we haven’t even begun thinking about.

What once seemed impossible is now within reach. Data that was once untapped can be accessed in real time. Figure out which “things” you need to have connected to scale, to control your business, and to serve your customers. I invite you to be part of the change and learn about IoT. Understand when it will be applicable for you, and how soon you, your customers and partners can benefit from it.

AMUSE-BOUCHE

Amuse-bouche refers to an appetizer, and by French translation means, “to entertain the mouth.” It offers a glimpse into what you should expect from a meal. Also it’s free, compliments of the chef.

Decoding restaurant language

BY SCOTT MECHURA

This time of year, most restaurants and bars are ushering in another winter season. They’re cleaning out beer lines, relighting oven pilot lights, and welcoming some fresh faces, as well as old ones. Walk through the Buck’s T-4 kitchen over the holidays, and you might hear something like:

“Walking in, one red deer mid, one mister, two all day; one ribeye, stepped on; one chicken, naked; one trout reg; one trout with walleye prep, two all day; and all this is on the fly so let’s knock it out.”

While the above sentence may read like nonsensical gibberish to most, this is how cooks communicate with each other on a regular basis. Notice the difference in length between the previous paragraph and the following translation:

“There is a new ticket printing right now, and it has two red deer steaks total. One is prepared medium, the other one is prepared medium rare. Next is one rib eye prepared well done. After that, one chicken dish prepared with no sauce. And finally, two trout dishes, one prepared normal, and the other prepared with all the accompaniments that would normally go on the walleye dish. And because the ticket is late coming in, we are already behind so let’s try and get it going as quickly as possible.”

In a fast-paced kitchen, where seconds feel like an eternity, the average cook is trying as hard as he or she can to focus on a multitude of tasks and dishes they already have started. The first sentence is quick industry lingo that is clear and efficient to the well-trained cook’s ear. Also, any server walking by knows exactly what the expeditor just called out.

A typical response from another cook might be “Heard. I can cover the board, then I’m 86’d on chicken.”

Translation: “I have only one chicken left which will now be sold on the ticket that was just called out. I also have every other chicken order currently on my ticket rail, but I have no more after that.”

Like most every occupation or discipline, there is an inherent language that the average outsider would deem thoroughly confusing, or sometimes even humorous. Like a microwave being called “Chef Mike.”

When a cook is running low on an ingredient, for example, and he knows that running out at that moment is not an option, he “puts it on the stretcher.” In other words, he spreads out the remaining supply to last the rest of the evening.

Perhaps one of the most recognizable terms spanning multiple industries is the term “86.” Most people use it regularly but few know its origins.

It was coined in the era between the gold rush days and the overall gentrification of America at the turn of the 20th century, otherwise known as the “Wild West.” In those days, there were typically two proofs of whiskey: 100 and 86 proof. When a patron was deemed too intoxicated or was getting unruly, he was “86’d.” This meant he was no longer permitted to drink the 100 proof whiskey but rather “downgraded” to the mere 86 proof. No wonder we refer to it as the Wild West.

Starting new holiday traditions

BY JACKIE RAINFORD CORCORAN

EBS HEALTH COLUMNIST

Social gatherings, gift giving and an abundance of decadent foods during the holiday season can be comforting, but also overwhelming.

At a time when we’re supposed to be cheerful and full of generosity, December celebrations can cause stress and burnout, generating unwanted feelings of exhaustion and frustration.

So this year, I’m bringing new self-awareness to the holidays and making some radical changes.

First and foremost, I’m skipping a long family tradition of holding a cookie bake-off. While I used to devour Christmas cookies without a second thought, I’m now sensitive to the bloating and weight gain they cause. Sugar disrupts my digestive system, and I experience a severe crash after eating it. Why would I give this same experience as a gift?

This year, in lieu of giving homemade cookies to my clients, friends and family, I’m giving them ripe, beautiful oranges and pomegranates. These foods have powerful anti-inflammatory agents, cancer-reducing properties and are beneficial to the immune system during prime flu season.

I’m also not cutting down a tree because I struggle with feelings of guilt. Traditionally, my husband would find just the right evergreen and bring it home for me to decorate. While I love the look and smell of a Christmas tree in the house, in a time when global warming can no longer be ignored I wanted living trees to stay standing and absorbing carbon dioxide, in return for the oxygen they provide.

There are many wonderful do-it-yourself ideas on the Internet that explain how to display your favorite Christmas ornaments on a colorful and cool makeshift tree. We plan on stringing lights to the wall in the shape of a Christmas tree and place presents under there. Buying a potted tree is another alternative – if you have a green thumb and the tree is native to your area, you can plant and nurture your tree after the ground thaws.

With short, cold days and many social gatherings, this season can be tiring, so I’m going to politely decline invitations that cause me to stretch myself too thin. Saying “no thank you” is ultimately kinder to you and loved ones than saying “yes,” if it means getting sick as a result of wearing ourselves down.

I love holiday shopping, but somehow it’s easier for me to be financially irresponsible in the name of gift giving. Unfortunately, money is the No. 1 cause of stress among Americans and this is exacerbated during the holidays.

Unmanaged stress of any kind can cause inflammation, the root of most illness. In an attempt to ward this off, I’m creating a “gift budget” and sticking to it. Origami ornaments will be lovingly made for all my friends and family this year.

What are your triggers this time of year? What new traditions can you create to ring in the New Year more happily, healthfully and energetically? Encourage your friends and family as well, so you can assist each other to bring deeper meaning to the holidays.

Moose: Alces alces shirasi

Did you Know?

The largest in the deer family, a moose can live up to 20 years.

The loss of spruce forage from the 1988 fire in Yellowstone National Park, combined with the harsh winter of 1988 – 1989, took a large toll on the number of moose in the park. In the 1970s, there were about 1,000 moose in Yellowstone, but that number has dropped to less than 200 animals today due to hunting outside the park, burning of habitat, and predators.

Paid for by the animals in your backyard.

The Medical Clinic of Big Sky’s 22nd ski season has begun at Big Sky Resort. It’s surreal to change what we’ve been doing for the past seven months, shifting efforts to the resort, while still plugging away at our office in Big Sky Town Center. We’ve expanded operations to a seven-day workweek, and anticipate more injuries this winter than during summer and fall.

Every year opening day is a little different. This season’s early snows gave us hope for excellent Thanksgiving conditions, but the descriptions I heard from injured patients made the conditions sound thin and rocky, and conducive to injuries.

In the first two days of the season, we saw three dislocated shoulders – I think that’s a record. All three were immediately diagnosed and reduced within a minute or two, but it’s not a great way to begin a winter of skiing or snowboarding.

I still remember the first dislocated shoulder of our first ski season on Dec. 12, 1994. We were relaxing in the waiting room when a man walked in holding his right arm at an odd angle. It took a few moments to figure out what was wrong, several more minutes to consult an emergency textbook, and then about two or three hours to finally get the shoulder back into place.

I needed the help of the ski patrol, as well as Dr. Fran Balice who gave advice and pulled on the arm. Balice had helped ski patrol with medical problems in the years before I came to Big Sky, and together we finally fixed the dislocation. I can still hear the loud pop it made when it went back in the socket.

This year, after a busy Thanksgiving Day, there were progressively fewer people on the mountain, until $20 Friday. That morning I recorded a radio ad warning about hitting rocks, and several people came in later in the day with cuts on their legs from run-ins with rocks. My advice in the radio ad was that we should all wear kneepads – like the telemark skiers do – if we’re using our “rock” skis.

One unlucky lady fell very hard on her right shoulder and not only dislocated it, but also broke off a piece of bone called the “greater tuberosity.” It’s an uncommon but possible complication when the shoulder dislocates. At first, the broken fragments of bone look very far apart, but when the dislocation is reduced, the pieces come back together.

This complication not only makes for an even more painful injury than a simple dislocated shoulder, but also delays the healing process by several months since normal, healthy bone takes that long to fuse back together.

In an uncomplicated dislocation, the soft tissues holding the shoulder joint in place need time to tighten back up. Immobilization for a week is necessary and then physical therapy usually gets the shoulder back to normal, so that it won’t dislocate again at the slightest provocation. Those who don’t heal well, or are traumatized too soon after a first dislocation, can end up with a shoulder that won’t stay in place, eventually resulting in surgery.

Stay safe out there during the holiday season!

Declining prices hit energy-producing states hard

BY BEN NEARY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - While other states were tightening their belts during the dark days of the Great Recession, Wyoming was socking away billions of dollars in energy revenues in the bank, building new schools and funding an endowment that offers college scholarships to its high school grads.

But with the recent slide in energy prices, fuel-rich states like Wyoming and Alaska are now facing the same sort of budget crises that had hit the rest of the nation.

Commodity prices have plunged over the past two years. That’s forced some energy states to dip into their “rainy day funds.” And state officials say they’re worried that they don’t know when the rain’s going to stop.

Several energy-producing states were counting on oil prices to hold steady at $50 to $60 a barrel.

There’s no question about it, we’re going to face a serious shortfall,” Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead said this week when he rolled out his budget proposal for the coming two years.

In Wyoming, the nation’s leading coal-producing state, state fiscal analysts recently warned that revenues from federal coal leases are likely to fall from nearly $740 million in the two-year funding cycle that covered 2013-14 down to just $26 million in 2019-2020. The state has relied heavily on federal bonus payments to fund its schools.

Mead is proposing to reduce the amount of state mineral revenues that goes into permanent savings to free up money to fund programs.

Arturo Perez, fiscal analyst with the National Conference of State Legislatures in Denver, said the global oil glut is having an impact across the world.

“It’s safe to say that energy-producing states are weathering some issues with regard to revenue collections,” Perez said.

Nationwide, the amount that states and Native American tribes receive from energy production on federal lands has dropped 30 percent from FY 2013 to FY 2015, from $14.2 billion to $9.9 billion.

The problem may be most dramatic in Alaska, which long has relied on oil revenues to help fund state government. Alaska now faces an estimated budget gap of about $3.5 billion, even after a round of furloughs, eliminating positions and other austerity measures.

Alaska hasn’t ruled out the prospect of additional cuts or even new taxes – a shocking notion in a deeply conservative state proud of its lack of an income tax.

Lawmakers in Oklahoma also recently raided that state’s constitutional Rainy Day Fund for about $150 million to help close a $611 million hole in the budget for the current fiscal year.

The Oklahoma fund will probably be tapped again with the state expecting another $1 billion hole in the upcoming fiscal year. State finance officials say much of the shortfall is the result of the plunging price of oil and natural gas and its impact on Oklahoma’s economy.

In New Mexico, projections released in August estimated that revenues from oil and gas were expected to be more than 16 percent less than the previous fiscal year.

Legislative Finance Committee Chair Sen. John Arthur Smith said last month that New Mexico had been through tough times before but managed to pull through thanks to healthy reserves and conservative predictions.

“We thought we weathered the storm, but we might be headed directly into another storm and that’s a little bothersome,” Smith said.

The situation isn’t nearly as dire in Texas, the nation’s leading oil-producing state, partly because it has diversified its economy enough to shield it from the bust.

Texas Comptroller Glenn Hegar announced in October that he was revising downward his estimate on how much the state will have to spend for its 2016-2017 budget cycle in response to lower oil prices.

Hegar said he was dropping the estimate from about $113 billion in January to about $110 billion. But lawmakers are only slated to spend about $106 billion this coming year, so that revision will still mean Texas is set to run a surplus.

In North Dakota, where an oil boom has transformed the state, depressed crude prices and a drop in drilling are depressing tax collections. Overall revenues are 7.5 percent lower than were expected for the two-year budget cycle that began July 1.

Associated Press reporters Susan Montoya Bryan in Albuquerque, N.M.; Becky Bohrer in Juneau, Alaska; Matt Brown in Billings, Mont.; James MacPherson in Bismarck, N.D.; Sean Murphy in Oklahoma City and Will Weissert in Austin, Texas, contributed to this report.

Cold Hard Cash in Bozeman

Faultline North

BOZEMAN – The Cold Hard Cash Show is an original and innovative tribute to the music of Johnny Cash and The Tennessee Three, and the Missoula-based band will bring their hard-driving sound to Bozeman’s Faultline North on Dec. 18.

Fronted by guitarist and singer Merle Travis Peterson, Cold Hard Cash brings to life classic Johnny Cash songs. The band performs with the energy of the live “At Folsom Prison” and “At San Quentin” albums with a sound so accurate you think you’re listening to “The Man in Black” himself.

The band formed in 2005, and in addition to Peterson on vocals and guitar, the lineup includes longtime member Fel Torres on drums and Trebor Riddle on upright and electric bass.

Since the early days, Cold Hard Cash have performed on hundreds of stages, often sharing them with a diverse variety of artists. They’ve been on billings with Eric Church, Charlie Daniels, Eddie Money and Los Lobos, among many others.

In 2008, the band made their national television debut when they performed on “The Late Show with David Letterman,” helping them gain a worldwide fan base. This performance helped land them on stages at several nationally known festivals. Cold Hard Cash has played at the Memphis in May festival, the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally, Daytona Bike Week, the Lonestar Rally in Texas, and the Johnny Cash Festival-Roadshow Revival in Ventura, Calif.

The band recorded a song for longtime Eddie Money drummer Glenn Symmonds in 2014, and was featured on his “Friends of Glenn’s” album. The Cold Hard Cash Show continues to tour across the country nonstop, spreading the great music of Johnny Cash.

Doors open for the 9 p.m. show at 8 p.m., and tickets can be purchased in advance at faultlinenorth.com or at the door. Faultline North is located on Gallatin Park Drive in Bozeman.

“Cowspiracy: The Sustainability Secret” is an eye-opening and polarizing documentary released in 2014 by filmmakers Kip Andersen and Keegen Kuhn, and produced by Leonardo DiCaprio.

The feature documentary follows suit with many recent films that take on important global issues and deliver riveting statistics. “Cowspiracy” is unique in that it not only addresses the issue of climate change but also links close ties to relevant topics like health, economics, water consumption, politics, population and pollution. It will be nearly impossible for any viewer to not question their beliefs and habits, making this a powerful and controversial film.

In a world with so many confusing messages about how and why humans are destroying earth and moving toward extinction faster than ever before, “Cowspiracy” reveals a jaw-dropping discovery about how meat consumption could be one of the largest culprits to the mass devastation of the earth.

The film outlines how animal agriculture is the leading cause of deforestation, water consumption and pollution, is responsible for more greenhouse gases than the transportation industry, and is a primary driver of species extinction, habitat loss, topsoil erosion, ocean “dead zones,” and virtually every other environmental ill.

In reaction to “Cowspiracy,” Amanda Radke, editor of the blog BEEF Daily, posted a series of entries attacking the legitimacy of this movie and rebutting some of the facts.

Radke addressed the conflicting estimates on amounts of water it takes to raise cattle and create beef, concluding her analysis by referencing the website, factsaboutbeef.com. The site is funded by BEEF Checkoff, a producer-funded marketing and research program designed to increase domestic and/or international demand for beef, according to beefboard.org’s website.

“In reality, it takes 441 gallons of water to produce one pound of boneless beef. Farmers and ranchers are committed to water conservation and have reduced the amount of water used to raise beef by 12 percent compared to 30 years ago,” the site reads.

In comparison, 441 gallons of water is a fraction of what is used to produce other everyday items. It takes over 713 gallons of water to produce one cotton T-shirt; 39,090 gallons to manufacture a new car; and 36 million gallons per day is leaked from the New York City water supply system. So if we really care about water conservation, we should stop wearing clothes, driving cars and using water altogether in our homes and businesses.”

While this movie will incite knee-jerk reactions in some viewers and cause them to grip their cheeseburgers tighter, “Cowspiracy” is an important and well-researched film that provokes thought. This movie is not for the faint of heart, and is likely to cause you to have uncomfortable discussions with your ranching friends who are the fabric of the Western landscape. After all, do your kids know where meat comes from and how it travels from a field to a plate?

The challenge with “Cowspiracy” is that its message is so polarizing it even insinuates that you cannot be an environmentalist if you eat meat, a comment that will likely make steak lovers tune out, discredit and forget the film in a similar way to foreboding movies like “An Inconvenient Truth.”

The trend in controversial documentaries is important but because many, like “Cowspiracy,” come across as alarmist and it’s easy for mainstream America to discount the messages and stay out of theaters.

For this viewer, the powerful message “Cowspiracy” delivers is the negative impact Earth’s massive and growing population is having, and our need to change as we have over-tapped the planet’s resources almost beyond repair.

We are no longer a society of hunter-gatherers; subsistence farming and hunting will not feed 7 billion mouths. If we want future generations to witness oceans filled with schooling fish, forests full of game and clean streams, we must change our human trajectory or be prepared to witness the consequences.

The only way to gain widespread acceptance for these environmental issues is to make it easy for people to choose an alternative. Expensive solar panels, pricey organic plant-based protein, and other options only push the ratio toward cheaper and easier-to-obtain alternatives which are usually no good for the environment and speeding up the runaway train we call humanity.

“Cowspiracy” is highly recommended for anyone daring enough to learn more about the facts of human impact on the planet, and to confront lifelong habits and beliefs.

American Life in Poetry: Column 559

BY TED KOOSER, U.S. POET LAUREATE

Several years ago, I co-edited an anthology of poems about birds, and I wish I’d had the opportunity to include this one, a delight. J. Allyn Rosser lives in Ohio. Her most recent book is “Mimi’s Trapeze.”

Pelicans in December
By J. Allyn Rosser

One can’t help admiring their rickety grace and old-world feathers like seasoned boardwalk planks.

They pass in silent pairs, as if a long time ago they had-weared of calling out. The wind tips them, their un-gainly, light-brown weight, into a prehistoric wobble, wings’-end fingers stretching from fingerless gloves, necks slightly tucked and stiff, peering forward and down, like old couples arm in arm on icy sidewalks, careful, careful, mildly surprised by how difficult it has become to stay dignified and keep moving even after the yelping gulls have gone; even after the scattered sand, and the quietly lodged complaints.

With its towering mountains, blue-ribbon trout streams and proximity to public lands, it’s no wonder people flock to Montana, Gallatin County, and Big Sky especially.

From 2003 to 2012, Gallatin was the fastest growing county in the state as its population increased nearly 30 percent, according to a February report by Bozeman-based nonprofit Headwaters Economics, a community development and land management research group.

Big Sky has experienced that growth in spades. A 2014 housing study found that 93 percent of Big Sky’s workforce commutes from elsewhere in the county, and the community is 1,300 units short of the demand for affordable housing.

But despite the lack of housing priced at the bottom of the market, one need only stand at the corner of Lone Mountain Trail and Ousel Falls Road in the evening – the constant traffic stream of cement, gravel and contractor trucks indicates that Big Sky development shows no signs of slowing down. The numbers paint a slightly different story.

The infographic below shows Big Sky real estate sales from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 2015, and compared to the same period last year some interesting trends arise. The average residence sale price has decreased 12 percent – from $873,433 to $770,496 – and average sale price for land has fallen 8 percent.

However, median sale price is a better indicator of where the market is at currently, because it represents the home costs in the middle of the market, and isn’t affected by sales of ultra-expensive homes or parcels, like average sale price is. The 2015 median sale price actually increased 2.5 percent over the same 11 months in 2014 and median land price increased 11 percent.

“Median sale price is slightly up, meaning more of the middle of the market is moving,” said L&K Real Estate owner/broker Ryan Kulesza, who believes the drop in overall sales volume is a direct result of reduced inventory in 2015.

This year, total volume in residence sales fell 31 percent, likely the effect of 2014’s high inventory. Median sale price actually increased 2.5 percent over the same 11 months in 2014 and median land price increased 11 percent.

If you’re in a position to buy in Big Sky this is a great time, as federal interest rates continue to stay at historic lows. But that’s unlikely to last, according to Big Sky First Security Bank Branch President Joe Miller.

“It’s become more and more likely that we’ll see rate increases in 2016,” Miller said, alluding to the Federal Open Market Committee meeting Dec. 15-16. “We might see a Fed rate increase as early as the December meeting. If not then, most likely at the March [2016] meeting. Knowing rising rates may soon become a reality, this is a great time to buy if you’re comfortable with the market.”
As with any economic sector, real estate is subject to the law of supply and demand. A great example of this is the recovery of the Big Sky residential real estate market from 2009-2015. In 2009, the number of buyers purchasing real estate was at a historic low. At the same time, many sellers put their homes on the market, resulting in a high supply of inventory. Inventory remained high until 2011 when the median price reached its low point.

From 2011-2014, the market recovered at a fast pace, with inventory dropping below the number of sold homes, causing a price increase of 54 percent over three years. In the past year, we have been nearing an “economic equilibrium” where the supply and demand has become almost equal. As you would expect, the price has followed, with just a 4 percent increase in median residence price from 2014 to 2015.

Interestingly, the land market in Big Sky had a different recovery pattern. Inventory for land continued to increase until 2010. Although it reached its low point in 2013, sales had not caught up and the average land price continued to decline until 2014. This highlights that land sales are often influenced by external factors such as building cost and availability. While land prices increased in 2015, they are still below the seven-year average.

What does this all mean for today’s market?

• The equilibrium in the residential market indicates that the initial recovery jump has occurred, stabilizing prices rather than experiencing drastic increases or decreases, barring external factors. It’s the magic balance point where it is equally a seller’s and buyer’s market.
• The higher supply of land inventory is keeping prices low, though they have begun an upward trend. Current building prices are generally higher than replacement costs for purchasing built product – making land a good long-term investment – but residences are a better value if you’re looking to move in soon.

The Architect’s Wife
Creating casual elegance

For those who haven’t had the pleasure of visiting The Architect’s Wife, it’s worth the trip. The store is synonymous with the taste and style of Abby Hetherington’s interior design firm Abby Hetherington Interiors, known for casual elegance in both residential and commercial projects.

The Architect’s Wife is a motley collection of curated luxury and rarity, punctuated with ample personality. From found objects to high-end product lines sourced from coveted vendors across the globe, all are handpicked with equal parts experience and exuberance by the AHI team.

AHI’s philosophy is to create for the family rather than imposing a personal preference for a trend or style. It’s a malleable approach to decorating, perfect for clients seeking a partner rather than someone to make all the decisions for them. After years of working in the industry, AHI has built a portfolio that reads more like a family album than a company prospectus.

The Architect’s Wife was born of necessity. The AHI team felt the pinch of not having the right item accessible at the right time. Hetherington’s 3,000-square-foot solution to this problem now holds all her favorite things, which she can offer to everyone. The Architect’s Wife services AHI clients, customers in the Gallatin Valley and beyond, and other interior designers and industry professionals looking to snag the perfect piece on the spot.

The store is dynamic, with an ever-changing inventory of one-of-a-kind finds. AHI acquires products from across the globe, but never leaves Montana out of the picture. You can find a chic eco-conscious sofa from Los Angeles, flanked by a lamp from Italy that’s adjacent to a drafting table salvaged from the depths of a Butte mine. Regardless of where your hunt takes you, each item is thoughtfully selected for its unique story or emotional pull.

Hetherington and her team have created more than just a beautiful display of furniture, lighting, and décor. They know how to choose just the right items to capture a sense of place and purpose – items that come to life, adding to the comfort and curiosity of others. AHI crafts each home to be a reflection of its inhabitants, rather than an exhibition of its things.

The Architect’s Wife is located at 23 W est Babcock Street in Bozeman. Visit architectswife.com or call (406) 577-2000 for more information. For interior design services contact Abby Hetherington Interiors at abby@hetheringtoninteriors.com or call (406) 404-1330.
The 1,501± acre Elk Meadows Ranch is not only a stunningly beautiful and private recreational ranch, it is also a great real estate investment, a superb elk and deer hunting ranch and a gathering place for friends and family. It is virtually impossible to find a world-class ranch within minutes of a world-class ski resort; this unique quality makes it rare in an asset class built on its lack of supply. Elk Meadows Ranch is in close proximity to Spanish Peaks Mountain Club, The Yellowstone Club and just 12± miles from the Six Shooter ski lift at the Madison Base Area of Big Sky Resort. This location contributes to the attractiveness of the ranch as an investment, particularly right now with the Big Sky market booming. However, once you own the ranch and begin enjoying every aspect of it as well as the fly fishing on the Madison River and the many restaurants, golf courses and festivals in Big Sky and Ennis, you'll forget about the investment quality of the ranch because you'll never want to sell.

In 1968, NBC newscaster Chet Huntley conceptualized Big Sky with a dream that required vision and character to see it through: harnessing the rugged beauty and power of 11,166-foot Lone Mountain into a world-class resort, with a unique blend of European access and elegance paired with the spirit of the Rocky Mountain West. Thanks to that dream, Big Sky has sprung to life.

Bob Simkins of Bozeman knew he wanted to be part of the Big Sky life, so in 1970 he purchased six square miles of land with former partners the Taylor family from Bozeman – some of this land would help form the Big Sky Meadow Village area. Over the next two decades, the Simkins family visited their property for weekend adventures to hike, fish and picnic where the Town Center is today. When Bob passed away in 1993, he left his family the land and a dream of making a difference in Big Sky.

Today the Simkins family and the Town Center development team works each day to help Big Sky fulfill its potential. As their father had done since the beginning, the Simkins look forward to maintaining their stewardship of Town Center because they enjoy being involved in the evolution of this community.

“We appreciate all of our businesses, especially the early visionary business owners and entrepreneurs who took a leap of faith on our vision,” said Bill Simkins, Town Center’s master developer and managing partner. “We feel that the best is yet to come.”

This vision has taken root as Town Center continues to grow with purpose. Recent growth has included the addition of Roxy’s Market; the Big Sky Medical Center; the mixed-use Peaks Building; a mixed-use building now under construction across from East Slope Outdoors; 14 residential condos under construction at Essentia condos; and a commercial building that will soon be under construction north of Lone Peak Cinema on the corner of Ousel Falls Road and Town Center Avenue.

Additionally, 2016 will see construction of the central plaza – an engaging and unique public gathering space along Town Center Avenue in front of a planned hotel – as well as two parking lots near Town Center Avenue that together will hold about 400 vehicles, among other projects.

To inquire about commercial or residential development opportunities, call Town Center at (406) 586-9629 or visit bigskytowncenter.com.
Creating a harmonious home is essential to our wellbeing, and it’s important to heed our senses and “gut feelings” when selecting finishes and fabrics for our living space. Feng shui addresses how you respond to your environment in body, mind, spirit and emotion. It’s the practice of analyzing spatial arrangements to create the healthiest and most beneficial energy flow.

A celebration of art and organic materials brings feng shui to the mountains. By taking our mountain landscape into account when designing our homes with wood, stone, metal, hides, and wool we feel rejuvenated and at peace after a day of skiing, hiking or fishing.

One of the easiest ways to bring good energy into your home is with art and color. Certain colors, shapes, and images will bring needed energy and balance into your space. How a person responds to the energy of different colors is a crucial component of the design process.

For example, to create a mature ambiance with primary colors, mix in warm tones such as natural fibers and textures. We all go through color phases based on unconscious and current emotions, which is why color is important to our emotional and physical balance.

“When working with design clients it is very apparent what they like and don’t like just by paying attention to their non-verbal reactions,” says interior designer Lori Elliott, of Big Sky’s Fercho Gallery & Elliott Design. “Even when they cannot express what they like or don’t like about something, their eyes will quickly tell their emotion.”

With over 20 years of interior design experience, Elliott easily guides clients through their design selections by focusing on their energy. The same thing happens when people visit an art gallery, according to Elliott’s partner Kira Fercho.

“Individuals are drawn to specific art pieces because of the positive energy they feel from it,” says Fercho, whose impressionistic oil paintings offer different energies due to the various color pallets she uses. Clients either love the high energy of the red teepees or appreciate the tranquility of the aspen scenes she paints.

Every choice of artwork, furniture, lighting and fabric physically interacts with one’s energy. Knowing what feels good to a person can help them make appropriate finish and color selections for their home. It’s important for an interior designer to pay attention to each client’s energy to help them create a home that is true to their style, allowing them to retreat and rejuvenate.

The five elements of feng shui: wood, fire, earth, metal and water are all found in the mountains. These multi-textural elements, infused with contemporary design, are the perfect mix to create a cozy mountain home environment – all complementing the amazing energy we receive from our mountain landscape.

Fercho Gallery & Elliott Design is located at 32 Town Center Avenue in Big Sky. Visit ferchoelliott.com or call (406)551-3995 for more information.

Weekend Getaway: Jackson Hole, Wyo.

BY EBS STAFF

Jackson, Wyo., is a mountain town featuring two heartbeats—the mountain village at Jackson Hole Mountain Resort, and the famed downtown adorned in elk antlers, wooden boardwalks, and a vibrant shopping and restaurant scene.

Visitors travel from around the world to ski and play here, but as residents of Gallatin County, we’re fortunate to live just a short drive away. Big Sky’s proximity to Jackson, coupled with the recreation, lodging and food options makes Jackson the perfect weekend getaway destination.

This place is a recreational paradise. Located due south of Grand Teton and Yellowstone National Parks, Jackson Valley, aka the “Hole,” is home to an array of outdoor opportunities including resort and backcountry skiing, fly-fishing, climbing, rafting, hiking ... the list goes on.

First time in Jackson? Don’t sweat it. EBS has you covered with our staff picks on where to stay, eat, and, of course, ski!

Rooms at Hotel Jackson are comfortable, quiet and appointed with the rustic, modern mountain luxuries you seek on a vacation stay and expect of a new luxury hotel, down to the plush beds and fireplaces. Hotel Jackson’s lobby also features a quaint and quality restaurant, FIGS, serving Mediterranean-inspired, Wyoming fare. 120 N. Glenwood Street, Jackson, Wyo. hoteljackson.com (307) 733-2200

Jackson Hole Mountain Resort celebrates its 50th anniversary this season, and is sharing the love in many ways. During the last three weeks in January, powder hungry snow-sliders receive 50 percent off single-day lift tickets when they present a valid 2015-2016 season pass from any resort, anywhere in the world. Also new this season is the Teton quad chairlift, accessing steep glades and deep snow, which previously could only be reached by hiking.

ANTLER ARCHES

A photo in front of one of the iconic antler arches is a must for new Jackson visitors. The first arch was built in 1953 and the group of four arches have been beloved downtown Jackson monuments ever since. Comprised of shed elk antlers collected from the nearby National Elk Refuge, the arches are an artistic wonder comprised of about 2,000 antlers each and weighing 10,000-12,000 pounds. Stop by George Washington Memorial Park, commonly known as “Town Square,” after some shopping to take a photo or admire their wild beauty.

MOUNTAIN MAN TOY SHOP

Inspired by the outdoor heritage and lifestyle of Jackson Hole, this shop features an array of handcrafted tools, gifts and accessories for the modern day outdoorsman that make any adventure possible. Be sure to stop by and check out their display of tomahawks and axes or grab a bag of Pig Candy – a bacon flavored treat inspired by local restaurant Genevieve’s.

A fly fisher’s wish list

BY PATRICK STRAUB
EBS FISHING COLUMNIST

Are you dreading having to answer the question, “What do you want for Christmas?” Scratching your head about what to give? Swing for the fences with these homerun gift ideas, which can all be purchased or arranged locally.

Orvis Mirage Reel. The high-performance, large-arbor Mirage fly reel combines superior performance and durability. Using the same principles employed for fighter jet brakes, the carbon contact sheet and stainless drag drum gives this reel smooth, consistent and infinitely adjustable stopping power – from free spooling to a dead stop. The crew at Big Sky’s East Slope Outdoors describes these reels as, “One of our best sellers because it is just that good. It fishes well and looks sweet too.”

Paragonia Simple Fly Fishing Kit. This Simple Fly Fishing Kit includes a 10-foot 6-inch tenkara rod and everything you need to connect to the fly-fishing experience. At the heart of the kit is the book, “Simple Fly Fishing: Techniques for Tenkara and Rod & Reel,” the most comprehensive book available on the subject of simple fly fishing, and specifically the tenkara technique.

The Abel Nipper. Created out of anodized aluminum, and with jaws of premium stainless steel, the Abel Nipper is a long-standing staple on any gift list – it’s also the best nipper in the fly-fishing world. But at $50 for standard black, and up to $100 for artistic prints, such as a Derek DeYoung brown trout skin or skull-and-crossbones, a lot of folks suffer sticker shock. The angler in your life will cherish these because they’re unlikely to splurge on it themselves.

RL Winston Boron III LS Fly Rod. Montana-inspired and Montana-made, this new model from RL Winston is the best “all-arounder” rod to hit the market in years. Not too stiff and fast, and not too soft and slow, it’s clear the heart and soul of the Boron III LS lies in Montana trout streams. Delicate presentations, double-nymph rigs, and dragging streamers are all in this rod’s wheelhouse.

Simms Rogue Fleece Hoody. Looking like a professional fly fisher is easy, though sometimes feeling like it is tougher. But with this Bozeman-inspired Simms hoody, you’ll feel like a pro. This bad boy is equipped with weather-shielding attributes to soldier through the day, including a 100-percent polyester woven face backed with a water-shedding DWR finish and fleece lined hand-warmer pockets.

Redington’s Butterstick Fly Rod. This reasonably priced rod is perfect for someone who has every fly rod known to man. It has silky-smooth action – like butter, baby – allowing the angler to fully feel the casting stroke. Even with its Barry White smoothness, this rod can cut the wind. Plus it makes a Taylor Fork dink feel like a Missouri River bruiser.

Patagonia Foot Tractor Wading Boots. Bozeman and Big Sky’s home water, the Gallatin River, is a minefield of slippery boulders. Ideal for our mountain streams, these boots have aluminum bars on the sole that help with traction on rocks. They also grip well on muddy trails and won’t accumulate snow. If you care about your angler not slipping and falling, treat them – and you – this holiday.

Sweetgrass Fly Rods. Authentic as it gets, these rods are designed and constructed by legendary builders, and are of heirloom quality. With over 120 years of collective rod-building experience, the Sweetgrass Rod team promises to build bamboo fly rods that are as special as they are a credit to the craft.

Instruction and knowledge. Money used for instruction is never misspent. Our area is home to fantastic guides and outfitters, fly tiers, guide schools and women’s fly-fishing schools. For anglers who live here, but don’t fish as much as they’d like, spending a day or two with a local guide, taking a class or a fly tying lesson gives them a valuable resource down the road.

As a kid, my parents always told me the gift-giving season wasn’t about my wants and needs – my personal joy was derived from giving to others, they said. As a lifelong angler, I can tell you that if you give any of these gifts this season, you and the angler in your life will be full in the joy department.

Pat Straub is the author of six books, including “The Frugal Fly Fisher,” “Montana On The Fly,” and “Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Fly Fishing.” He and his wife own Gallatin River Guides in Big Sky and Pat operates the Montana Fishing Guide School and the Montana Women’s Fly Fishing School.
Ski Tips: Floating between turns

BY DAN EGAN
EBS CONTRIBUTOR

The moment between turns is magical. It’s a time of detachment from what was and what will be; a feeling of weightlessness generated by the energy of the last turn mixed with a freedom of floating through time and space.

If you want to learn to float between your turns, you must digest a few key truths about skiing:

Have a game plan. Descending a snow-covered mountain requires strategy and tactics, and these take preparation, planning and execution. Pushing off the top of a run with a game plan of where you’re going will add purpose to your skiing. Once you understand your destination and why you are going there, your confidence will build allowing you to arrange your body in proper skiing positions throughout the run.

Skis are designed to accelerate. The main function of turning is to change direction, not slow down. Every time I tell skiers this they look at me in disbelief, but its true. Technology is built into skis to absorb and control energy, and redirect skiers across and down the slope. Once you believe this you’ll enter into a new level of freedom on the mountain.

Stand perpendicular to the mountain. Between turns, standing at right angles to the slope you’re skiing will unlock your body from the cage of apprehension. It will place you in control and place you in a position to work with gravity rather than fight it.

To slow down, plan ahead. Deceleration happens over a series of turns. If you want to slow down, remain in balance and gain control, and practice slowing down over a series of three turns. This will introduce a whole new understanding to your run.

Ski the mountain in sections. Get in the practice of saying, “I’m going to start here and end there.” Then regroup and do it again. By skiing the slope in sections, you’ll feel more relaxed and confident going from point A to point B and the quality of your skiing will reflect this newfound confidence.

Try these simple steps on terrain below your ability level, and focus your attention to what is happening between your turns. Self-evaluate to determine your level of freedom. If you start to feel a release of energy and a detachment from the slope you’ll slowly start enjoying the feeling of time and space between turns and enter into a new dimension of the sport.

Today he teaches clinics and guides trips at locations around the world including Big Sky, where he’ll be teaching Dec. 14-15, March 3-5 and March 10-12. Smith Pivot MIPS helmet

Since first donning a helmet 15 years ago, Smith’s Pivot MIPS is one of the most comfortable lids I’ve worn. The fit wraps nicely around my face and ears, blocking out the wind and cold Montana air. Despite its lack of bulk it seamlessly accommodates a light beanie – which is key for me on extra cold days. The mini visor on the brim also keeps me sliding in style.

With 13 vents, I was worried the Pivot might be too drafty, but Smith’s AirEvac 2 and AirFlow climate control systems regulate the helmet’s temperature well – it keeps me warm without being too hot, and allows enough air flow to keep me cool on short inbounds hikes. While I hope to never have to use it, the integrated MIPS technology will allow a small rotation of the outer shell relative to the liner – if you crash and your head impacts at an angle it will decrease rotational forces, reducing potential damage to your brain.

Overall the Pivot MIPS is a great high-tech helmet that should provide years of solid performance. Available in both men’s and women’s styles, the price tag is a worthwhile investment in protecting your head, while enjoying deep days on the mountain.

BY JOHN ZIRKLE
EBS CONTRIBUTOR

A friend recently sent me a New York Times article titled “Google Cultural Institute Puts Us All Onstage” about a new immersive Google technology that enables users to experience 360-degree video on stage during live performances at New York’s City’s Carnegie Hall.

The Google Cultural Institute is already in place at prestigious venues around the world, and allows users to experience performing and visual arts at their best, from wherever they live.

The online responses to the article were mixed. Some commentators ardently opposed technology usurping the live experience, protesting that performances could only be understood if you were actually there. Others praised Google for devising a way to give access to people who might fall outside the socioeconomic and geographic range for attending such events. Personally, I think it’s great to have both – people will always find value in attending events in person, even if others are watching from home.

One of the incredible things about Big Sky is that we don’t have to worry about “lack of access” anymore. If you need a hospital, head down the road to the new Big Sky Medical Center. Want to see a movie, need a gallon of milk, or want a great education for your kids? It’s all just down the road. Want to ski some powder? Big Sky Resort is nearby.

When I first moved to Big Sky in 2009, I never thought I would say, “Want to go listen to a Grammy-winning artist for $20? Just go down the road.” It’s barely fathomable that we’ve managed to make that statement a reality at the Warren Miller Performing Arts Center in less than four years. Yet here we are.

The big picture for WMPAC is simple: We present in the winter, create in the summer, and attempt to inspire year-round. Intrinsic to that model is access. We strive to create opportunities for the entire community, and I’m happy to say we’ve succeeded.

In the day-to-day operations of the center, outside the limelight of our electric winter season and our exciting new summer conservatory, I have the privilege of working on stage with many of our community members, both young and not-so-young.

I witness kids jump on stage into the lights for the first time, and grin from ear to ear when they earn their first applause. Through the adult education program at the school district, we’ve been able to establish a fantastic troupe of local actors who spend countless hours rehearsing and memorizing lines – often in between shifts at their paying jobs – to produce an annual theatrical experience by and for the community.

Most importantly, I get to witness the Big Sky community breathing life into our center, giving it direction, filling it with warmth and adulation, and keeping it vibrant all year long.

Whether it’s an informative lecture on health, a rehearsal with kids, a world-class conservatory experience, or a powerful concert with some of the world’s best artists, I find comfort knowing we have unlimited access to an arts center just down the road.

John Zirkle is the artistic director at the Warren Miller Performing Arts Center and the Big Sky School District interim music teacher. When he’s not immersed in the performing arts he’s spending time with his new wife Ewa.
